This response to a COI query has been elaborated according to the EUAA COI Report Methodology and EUAA Writing and Referencing Guide.

Query responses are produced in response to COI information requests received from asylum authorities within EU+ countries or initiated by EUAA based on COI information needs. Query responses are produced within a limited time period, typically within 5 to 10 days. Within these time constraints, the information provided in this response has been researched, evaluated and processed with utmost care.

All sources used are referenced and cited in the bibliography section. A quality review has been performed in line with the above mentioned COI methodology. This document does not claim to be exhaustive or conclusive as to the merit of any particular claim to international protection. If a certain event, person or organisation is not mentioned in the report, this does not mean that the event has not taken place or that the person or organisation does not exist. Terminology used should not be regarded as indicative of a particular legal position.

The information in the response does not necessarily reflect the opinion of EUAA and makes no political statement whatsoever. The target audience is caseworkers, COI researchers, policy makers, and decision-making authorities. Any event taking place after the reference period is not included in this query response.
The Kamuina Nsapu militia

1. Background and activities of the Kamuina Nsapu militia

Kamuina Nsapu was a militia group primarily composed of individuals from the Luba ethnic group, named after the title of the customary chief in Kasai-Central province of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). The militia originated in 2016 from a dispute between Chief Jean-Prince Mpandi, who was designated as Kamuina Nsapu by his clan, and at the time government authorities who supported a different candidate. The local and national government supported Ntenda Tshiambi, who was considered politically closer to the central government as opposed to Jean-Prince Mpandi, seen as sympathetic to the opposition.

In 2016, following the denial of Mr. Mpandi’s request to be recognized as the Kamuina Nsapu customary chief by the then government authorities, Mpandi started to gather and mobilize supporters for his anti-government movement. On 12 August 2016, the Kamuina Nsapu chief was killed by the defence and security forces.

incident ‘marked a turning point in the crisis’,\textsuperscript{11} as Kamuina Nsapu militia’s attacks on state institutions intensified\textsuperscript{12} and spread across other provinces of Kasai.\textsuperscript{13}

The militia expanded through an organized recruitment process and the establishment of initiation halls known as ‘tshiotas’,\textsuperscript{14} overseen by emissaries of the late Kamuina Nsapu chief.\textsuperscript{15} These emissaries, also referred to as ‘apostles’, traveled across villages, setting up tshiotas and executing opposing village chiefs and villagers who refused to join the movement.\textsuperscript{16}

In 2017, local observers interviewed by the International Crisis Group in the Kasai region reported that ‘many young men and boys, some as young as five, had been conscripted or joined the militia’.\textsuperscript{17} Similarly, The OHCHR described that when entering villages, the militia demanded that locals would ‘hand over their children to be “baptized” and join the group’, targeting and killing those who resisted or opposed the recruitment of the children.\textsuperscript{18} As reported by the Radio France Internationale (RFI), the “baptism” was an essential step in the initiation process and consisted of consuming a potion believed to grant ‘invincibility and invulnerability’.\textsuperscript{19}

According to the UN Human Rights Council, ‘ancestral beliefs and rituals played an extremely important role’ in the militia and were strictly observed.\textsuperscript{20} During the fights, one or more girls called ‘ya mama’ were deployed to the front line, behind them there were boys armed with knives and sticks, while older members with weapons would follow in the last line.\textsuperscript{21} Militias believed that girls had the power ‘to catch firearm projectiles with their skirts’ while boys ‘had the magical power to transform into lethal weapons’.\textsuperscript{22}

In all incidents documented by the 2017 OHCHR report including ‘accounts of Congolese fleeing the crisis in the Kasai region’, the Kamuina Nsapu militia used children, with reports indicating recruitment of boys and girls as young as seven. According to a UN Security Council report published in 2018, over 60% of the Kamwina Nsapu militia were children.

The UN Human Rights Council in a report published in July 2018 concerning the situation in Kasai described that since 2016 in the region, different actors, including the Kamuina Nsapu ‘have committed numerous atrocities, including many cases of sexual violence and abusive treatment of children’.

The conflict ‘deescalated’ after the at the time opposition presidential candidate at the time, Félix Tshisekedi, whose family originated from Kasai region, came into power following the elections of January 2019. Tshisekedi’s call to militias for disbanding, led to the surrender of Kamuina Nsapu members and subsequent demobilisation of many militia members who returned to their communities. The UN Security Council reported that in Kananga, provincial authorities offered monetary compensation based on the type of weapon surrendered by the militia group, but international experts observed that the disarmament process lacked adequate supervision and oversight.

According to a 2021 report by the International Organization for Migration (IOM), despite recruitment into armed militias ‘has largely stopped’, some militias and especially members of Kamuina Nsapu, ‘reportedly retained their arms and remained active as community self-defense groups’ in the Kasai Central province. In July 2021, The UN Human Rights Council reported that the Kamuina Nsapu militia was active in the Tshikapa, Kamonia and Mweka territories of Kasai Province. In December 2021, Humanity & Inclusion (formerly Handicap International) indicated a resurgence of Kamuina Nsapu militia in Dibaya territory, Central Kasai province.

2. Treatment of members/supporters of Kamuina Nsapu militia by the government

In the 2021 UN Human Rights Council’s report ‘of the team of international experts on the situation in Kasai’, the experts acknowledged progress in socioeconomic reintegration for demobilised militia members in Kasai and Tanganyika provinces following the end of the ‘violent phase of the Kamuina Nsapu militia crisis’. However, IOM reported in 2021 that the complete disarmament of the Kamuina Nsapu militia in Kasai Central was hindered ‘due to uncertainties around amnesties and eligibility for limited reintegration support’.

Since 2021, DRC authorities conducted several trials against Kamuina Nsapu militiamen. Some examples of convictions include:

- In 2021, Nsumbu Katende, a commander of the Kamuina Nsapu militia, was convicted of committing war crimes in Kasai in 2017 and was sentenced to life in prison.
- In January 2022, a military court sentenced 51 people to death over the killing of two United Nations personnel who were investigating violence in the Kasai region in 2017. Reporting on the same incident, other sources indicated that 49 people were sentenced to death. According to the UN Security Council, some of the accused belonged to the Kamuina Nsapu militia group.
- On August 25, 2023, the Court of Appeal of Kasai-Central convicted a militiaman for crimes against humanity, committed in 2017.

Information on the execution of the sentences could not be found among the sources consulted by EUAA within time constraints.
